

What matters most to you?

The Seniors Health Research Priority Setting Partnership is seeking input on the areas that matter most for future research in seniors' health.

We want to hear from older adults, their caregivers, representatives, and clinicians on the questions that they feel are most important for seniors' health. Your responses will then be prioritized into a list of the most important questions that future research should address. We will then share the list with researchers and organizations so that we can work to answer the questions that matter most for improving seniors' health.

If you are:

- an older adult (65 years of age and over),
 - a caregiver of an older adult,
 - or work as an agency representative or clinician serving older adults,
- AND
- you live or work in the province of Alberta

we invite you to participate in this research prioritization study by answering a few questions on what you see as the issues most important for future research to address. You can provide your answers online or through a short pen-and-paper survey. Your participation is voluntary and you can remain anonymous.
